Emerging Issues in Prison Health

This volume recognizes and addresses the health care issues of prisoners, to establish best practices and to learn about the most recent evidence on several emerging and classical prison health issues. The first goal of this volume is to address emerging ethical issues related to health in prison. Second, it presents new evidence on several emerging and classical prison health issues.

Mental health is a considerable public health challenge in prisons across the world and suicide is cited as the leading cause of death among prisoners. The prevalence rates for a range of mental health disorders are considerably higher in people in prison throughout the world than people in the general community.

Mental health is a considerable public health challenge in prisons across the world and suicide is cited as the leading cause of death among prisoners. The prevalence rates for a range of mental health disorders are considerably higher in people in prison throughout the world than people in the general community.

Nevertheless, there were indications that the mere prospect of privatization had a positive effect on prison administration, making it more responsive to reform.

The average saving from privatization was only about 1 percent, and most of that was achieved through lower labor costs.

In the current "Mass Imprisonment" phenomenon in America, in which a million prisoners are incarcerated in a prison complex, America's current Prison-Industrial-Complex is reminiscent of Russia's early 20th century Gulag.